Stanley Palace. Chester is one of the most visited towns in Great Britain, its antiquity, its interesting history, and existing links with the past doubtless accounting for the greater part of its popularity. The name Chester is derived from the Roman "castra," it being the site of a Roman camp from about A.D. 60. The Stanley Palace is the oldest specimen of timber architecture in Chester. It was formerly the site of a monastery of Black Friars, and latterly the residence of the Stanley family in 1591.
